Warning: fragile

Beth Galston's previous art installations have covered gallery spaces in curtains of ice and strange blue plants made of resin and wire. Her current display at the Boston Sculptors Gallery is made entirely of toothpicks. Tonight, you can see the exhibit "Fragilities," which features Galston's transformation of the South End art space. The Boston Sculptors Gallery is hosting a First Friday reception for "Fragilities" from 5 to 8. The party also celebrates Ann Torke's exhibit "Road Residue: the Accumulating Miles." Boston Sculptors Gallery, 486 Harrison Ave., 617-482-7781.
